A Brief History of Richmond Hill

Where the past meets the present, one step up Yonge Street at a time.

Richmond Hill's story began as a small settlement nestled between the townships of Vaughan and Markham, its growth deeply tied to the building of Yonge Street – the vital north-south route envisioned by Lieutenant-Governor John Graves Simcoe as a military road for Upper Canada.

Officially incorporated on June 18, 1872, Richmond Hill soon flourished thanks to its proximity to Toronto. Farmers, merchants, and travelers passed through on their way to city markets or further destinations to the north, making it a lively stop along the route.

By the early 20th century, Richmond Hill had earned a reputation as the "rose capital of Canada" – thanks to its flourishing greenhouse industry. The city crest, designed in the 1920s by local artist and carriage painter William Ashford Wright, proudly features both the Duke of Richmond's coat of arms and the roses that once defined the community.

Today, Richmond Hill is one of Ontario's most diverse and dynamic cities – a place of rapid growth and innovation, yet still grounded in the spirit that shaped its early days. From its quiet roots to its current vibrancy, it remains, true to its unofficial motto, "A little north, a little nicer."

The City of Richmond Hill's Mayor and Council are proud to stand behind our vibrant local business community.

We are deeply committed to supporting the entrepreneurs and business owners who choose Richmond Hill as their home and who play a vital role in the economic and social fabric of our city.

Your innovation, dedication, and resilience fuel our community's continued growth and prosperity.

Thriving Business Starts with Stronger and Happier Teams: CCSYR's Corporate Wellness Package

Supporting your workforce so you can see enhanced productivity, retention, and workplace morale

At Catholic Community Services of York Region (CCSYR), we've spent over four decades supporting people through life's challenges and evolved as a leader in fostering mental health resilience and well-being.

From newcomers to families navigating trauma and stress, we've supported individuals across diverse communities. Through these stories, we've come to understand how mental health impacts life, especially the workplace. Our clients—employees, leaders, students, parents, newcomers, and community members—trust us with their stories, giving insight into how work stress, burnout, trauma, stigma, and isolation impact well-being.

We believe addressing mental health early can transform workplace culture, which is why we created the CCSYR Corporate Wellness Package—a holistic, evidence-based, culturally responsive, and linguistically appropriate solution that helps employers build healthier, more resilient teams.

With resilient teams come tangible results: higher engagement, stronger performance, fewer sick days, improved retention, and long-term employee loyalty—all of which strengthen your bottom line.

In short, investing in mental health isn't just the right thing to do—it's smart business.

Why Success Starts with Wellness at the Workplace

Supporting employee mental health is no longer optional but a necessity for the success of businesses. According to the Canadian Mental Health Association, mental illness costs the Canadian economy over $50 billion each year. And Canadian businesses that invest in mental health support for three years and more see median annual returns more than double for every $1 spent, according to Deloitte research. But investing in wellness programs isn't just about preventing crises—it's about creating a culture of care that drives resilience, collaboration, and motivation. And that's where CCSYR comes in. We don't just respond to mental health challenges—we help businesses create holistic environments where

Where Every Street Holds a Story

Discovering the roots, people, and places that shaped Richmond Hill

From the carving of Yonge Street to the crest bearing roses and royal lineage, Richmond Hill's story runs deeper than most passersby realize. It's a town that grew from crossroads and greenhouses, that once wore the title of Canada's "Rose Capital," and that still carries the echoes of a time when local artists painted crests by hand and merchants traveled by carriage.

But history here isn't locked in the past — it walks alongside us in preserved heritage homes, civic landmarks, and long-standing family businesses. It's felt in community traditions, school names, and the quiet pride residents carry for the place they call home.

In this section, we reflect on the moments — big and small — that built the Richmond Hill of today. The people who came before us. The institutions they formed. And the sense of continuity that lives on, even as our city continues to evolve.

Reflections Through Youthful Eyes

Richmond Hill High School student artists reimagine community, memory, and place.

In March 2025, Richmond Hill High School student artists collaborated with teacher José D'Aversa and the City's Cultural Services team to present Richmond Hill Remembers: Time and Place — a visual exhibition hosted at the Richmond Hill Centre for the Performing Arts.

Each piece in the show reflects the students' personal experiences of Richmond Hill — exploring everyday moments, historic landmarks, and imagined memories. Some works revisit familiar spaces like bus stops, churches, and cafés. Others blend the past and present into surreal, emotional landscapes. Collectively, the exhibit becomes a portrait of the city seen through emerging artistic voices.

From acrylics and ink to digital and dry media, the techniques are as diverse as the perspectives. These student works remind us that Richmond Hill is more than a place — it's a living memory in motion.

CULINARY TIPS FROM EXECUTIVE CHEF MANOLO

With 18+ years of culinary experience working in the kitchen of the Sheraton Parkway Toronto North, Chef Manolo has had the opportunity to cook for large crowds of up to 1,500 people.

Here is his advice for entertaining this summer:

- Plan and prepare your menu in advance so you can enjoy the company
- Choose menu items that are stewed, curried or braised as they can be prepared in advance and taste even better when reheated (curried chickpeas, beef pot roast, braised lamb shanks, butter chicken)
- Provide vegetarian and vegan options
- Garnish the dish to compliment the eye (colour) and palate (taste) such as fried basil leaf, oven-dried teardrop tomatoes or heirloom tomato confit. For desserts, edible flowers or tuille.
